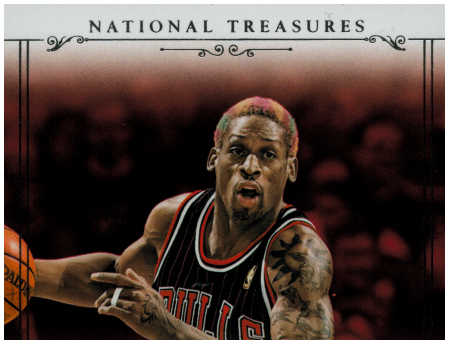
Future Gazette Features

For future issues of the Gazette, we plan on including two featured articles a month. One about the month's featured xARTIST and another about collectibles. This month we'll be talking a bit about upcoming changes to the sports market.

Panini Losing NBA/NFL Licenses Soon

Tenish years removed from locking down the NBA and NFL markets for the foreseeable future, Fanatics has come for Panini's throne, taking over their monopoly of the two leagues after years of Panini's dominance over the two sports.



Panini loses the NBA license in October of this year, so don't expect new officially licensed releases from them after that point. It's currently unknown if they'll attempt to get out any 2025-26 sets before their license expires.

Their NFL license is currently expected to expire after the 2026 season, though the exact date of that expiration seems elusive. It's safe to say however that we shouldn't expect any more official NFL products from them after the 2026 season, and we may not even see that depending on the results of ongoing litigation.

The Collectosaurus Project News

Starting in early 2025 we made a push to see if we already had enough public support to switch our focus from sales to services, and unfortunately were not able to generate enough through fundraising efforts to switch completely. It's not all bad news though as we were able to secure just enough funding to support our development of the site on a local dedicated server. Once we've updated the old site to a more modern setup, we'll begin posting behind-the-scenes sneak peeks of what will be coming later this year.
